

Hybrid Threats in Europe: Lessons and Responses
22 February | RUSI Library | 61 Whitehall SW1A 2ET

- 0930 - 1000 Registration
Refreshments served
- 1010 - 1055 In Conversation with –
Sir Malcolm Rifkind, Chairman, Intelligence and Security Committee, 2010-2015
Professor Malcolm Chalmers, Deputy Director-General, RUSI
- 1100-1215 Does hybrid warfare exist?
This panel will explore what is meant by hybrid warfare in the broader global context. Key ideas to be discussed are the differentiation between or the lack of a distinction between peace and conflict, as well as the targeting of civilian populations, and the plausible denial of attribution.

Dr Martin Murphy Associate Fellow, RUSI
Robert Seely MP
Adrian Nish, Cyber Threat Intelligence team, BAE Systems
Dr Samir Puri, Department of War Studies, King’s College London
Moderator: Veerle Nouwens, Researcher in Asia Studies, RUSI
- 1215-1300 Lunch
- 1300-1415 Hybrid Warfare in the Asia-Pacific
Panelists will question whether by equating hybrid warfare in Europe with that in the Asia-Pacific, analysts may be overlaying a European context onto that of Asia without thoroughly understanding the differences. The panel will build on the first panel’s element of hybrid warfare and assess how they are reflected in the Asia-Pacific region, particularly through China’s Three Warfares and DPRK activities.

Admiral (Retd) Tomohisa Takei, Distinguished International Fellow, US Naval War College
Nigel Inkster, Senior Adviser, IISS
Dr Nicholas Michelsen, Department of War Studies, King’s College London
Moderator: Ewan Lawson, Senior Research Fellow, RUSI
- 1415-1430 Coffee Break
- 1430-1545 Exploring mitigation measures
By understanding the contextual similarities and differences between hybrid warfare in Europe and Asia, this discussion will examine whether and what mitigation measures could be tailored to like-minded countries such as UK and Japan.
